

Navigating Change in Unprecedented Times

Project Management in a Virtual Environment

The key to effective project management is the people. Successfully managing projects is more important than ever in today's environment, particularly with the recent emphasis on virtual work. Defining, communicating, and meeting project goals is challenging when we are outside of the work environments we have become accustomed to. This session will provide tips for successfully managing projects in a virtual environment, with an emphasis on the people skills needed to ensure our project goals are achieved.

Tuesday, May 19, 2020

Time: 12:00 p.m. (EST)

Presenter: Michael Dillion

Dr. Michael Dillion holds a Dual Bachelors of Arts in Economics and Philosophy from the University of Pittsburgh, a Master of Arts in Organizational Leadership from Gonzaga University, a Doctorate of Education in Adult Education and Human Resource and Organizational Development from the University of Georgia. Prior to his career in Higher Education, Dr. Dillion worked in banking, finance, the mortgage business, and has taken leadership roles in multiple non-profit organizations. His academic interests include collaborative action and power dynamics, adult learning theory, organizational learning, critical human resource and organizational development theory, leadership theory, action research methodology, hybrid and online learning, and qualitative research.